US Inflation Reduction Act disrupts green industrial race

South Asia is rich in resources for renewable energy generation: hydropower in Nepal and Bhutan, wind energy potential in Bangladesh and Pakistan, and solar and wind energy generation in Maldives and Sri Lanka. Despite relying heavily on fossil fuels, South Asian countries have been steadily making progress in clean-energy projects. In the market for end products that use or potentially use clean-energy, India hosts companies with potential for international competitiveness, such as Tata Motors which dominate the domestic as well as South Asian electric vehicle (EV) markets and has been looking to export its exports to international markets. As of July 2021, India has 380 EV manufacturers, including 19 companies that manufacture four-wheelers. Industry exports were valued at US$13.3 billion in FY21, with USA, Germany, UK, Thailand and Italy as major importers. Exports were projected to grow to US$80 billion by 2026. However, the United States’ new Inflation Reduction Act (IRA) could change this trajectory.
